

Sketch Your Creature: Imagine your creature in detail. Is it large or small? Does it have scales, feathers, or fur? Take your time to draw every feature carefully. Don't forget to include any special adaptations your creature might have—like sharp claws for climbing or wings for flying. Your sketch will bring your creature to life on paper!

Describe Your Creature: Now, describe your creature in words. What kind of habitat does it live in? Does it prefer forests, deserts, or maybe even underwater? What does it eat to survive? Think about how its size, shape, and unique features help it thrive in its environment. Your description should paint a clear picture of your creature's life.

Name and Classify Your Creature: Give your creature a name that matches its characteristics. Is it a majestic "Forest Drake" or a mysterious "Deep Sea Glider"? Next, decide where your creature fits into the Animal Kingdom's classification. Consider whether it's a mammal, bird, reptile, amphibian, or perhaps a new category altogether. Justify your choice with scientific reasons based on your creature's traits.
