

What's been found?

Palaeontologists studied one dinosaur trap in Utah in the United States, and discovered more than 10,000 bones. They believe the plant-eaters stopped to drink at a lake, and were trapped in deep mud. Predators were trapped when they approached in the hope of an easy meal.